Year in Review - Fall

The 2014-15 academic session dawned with Middlebury's 16th president, Ronald D. Liebowitz, entering the final year of his presidency. Tragedy would rear its head more than once, but so would celebration. An historic moment comes with the naming of the institution's 17th leader. And it all begins with the arrival of a new class.

September

A new class arrives at Middlebury. Nearly 600 (587, to be exact) first years arrive in September, with another 86 to come in February. Among the first year class, 12 percent come from outside the United States and 26 percent identify as students of color. Further, 14 percent are the first in their family to attend college.

Middlebury mourns the loss of squash coach John Illig, who died unexpectedly in August. More than 200 members of the community attend a memorial celebration that included tears and laughter and a lot of hugs.

The 2014 Clifford Symposium brings to campus some of the brightest and most creative minds in the converging fields of technology and higher education. "Transforming the Academy in the Digital Era" features scholars and practitioners (including award-winning artist DJ Spooky) for a weekend of provocative and thoughtful exploration of the future of higher education.

October

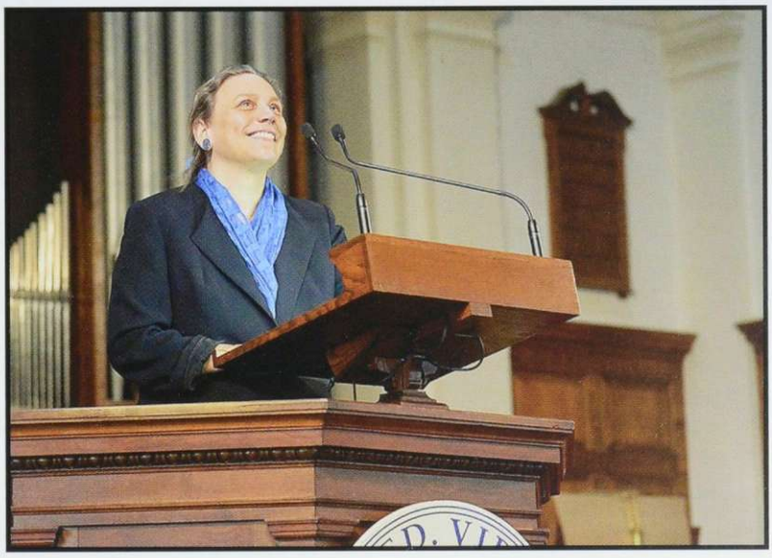
Homecoming is a joyous affair—football, field hockey, and men's and women's soccer savor victory on the athletic fields, while alum filmmaker Ryan Scura '11 screens his acclaimed documentary The Granite Stoke and Fast Company executive editor Rick Tetzeli '83 shares the secrets of his magazine's success.

Like Homecoming before it, Fall Family Weekend showcases the best of Vermont autumnal weather—and a schedule filled with stimulating events. Mary Robinson, the former president of the Republic of Ireland delivers a talk in Mead Chapel; the Center for Careers and Internships convenes a couple of well-attended workshops; athletic teams compete; and nearly 500 people trek to the Snow Bowl for a cookout and a hike up Worth Mountain.

Mohamed Hussein '17 is awarded the the 37th annual Paul W. Ward '25 Prize in Writing for his research paper "Linguistic Varieties in the Egyptian Short Story."

The curtain rises on the theatre department's production of Mendel, Inc, a heartwarming comedy set in New York City in the 1920s. The play honors the 60th anniversary of Hillel at Middlebury.

Osborne House, a historic Main Street residence, is lifted off its foundation and moved 1,135 feet across the Cross Street Bridge to a new foundation on the other side. The Osborne House move is the first step in a sequence of cooperative projects approved by Middlebury voters last spring to construct a new town hall on the former Osborne site and a new recreation center on Creek Road, south of downtown. The College will pay $5.5 million of the project's $7.5 million cost. On completion of the two new buildings, the current town office building and municipal gymnasium, located opposite the College's Twilight Hall, will be demolished to make way for a park.



November

The Middlebury Board of Trustees name Laurie L. Patton, dean of Duke University's Trinity College of Arts and Sciences and the Robert F. Durden Professor of Religion, as Middlebury's next president. Patton will be the first woman to lead Middlebury in its 214-year history, and the announcement of her appointment is greeted by a sustained standing ovation in a packed Mead Chapel. Patton will take office on July 1, 2015, succeeding Ronald D. Liebowitz, who has served as president since July 2004.

The Middlebury Phi Beta Kappa chapter inducts 10 students as new members. The students, all seniors, include: Taylor Custer '15, Leah Fessler '15, Jamie Lee '15, Kevin Liang '15, Xiner Liu '15, Michael Martini '14.5, Kristen Meredith '15, Katie Paradies '15, Kyle Slugg '15, and Danny Zhang '15. They have qualified to be Phi Beta Kappa members based on their academic records for the past three years.

An animated short film produced by Middlebury faculty and students wins three awards—including Audience choice, the Ben & Jerry's Award for a film that most eloquently raises environmental issues, and the Goldstone Award for the most promising emerging Vermont filmmaker. 11 Paper Place is the creation of visiting lecturer Daniel Houghton '06 and his students in Middlebury's Film and Media Culture department.

The fifth annual TEDxMiddlebury tackles the theme "Living in the Question: The Ongoing Process of Curiosity." The line-up of speakers include faculty members Will Nash and Christal Brown; alums Shane Scranton '12.5 and Nate Beatty '13.5; an astrophysicist from the American Museum of Natural History; and Rachel Liddell '15, winner of the TEDxMiddlebury student speaker contest.

Middlebury announces that the Bread Loaf campus and the Middlebury-owned land that surrounds it—approximately 2,100 acres—will be conserved, protected, and remain with the College in perpetuity. The Moore Charitable Foundation, private foundation run by Louis Bacon '79, and the College have established the Bread Loaf Preservation Fund, which will preserve and maintain the Bread Loaf campus and the surrounding forests and fields while also supporting educational programming and recreational activities. Much of the 2,100 acres will be protected through a conservation easement held by the Vermont Land Trust working in partnership with The Nature Conservancy.

December

Students, faculty, and staff walk out of classrooms and offices to stand in solidarity with citizens in Ferguson, Missouri, who are protesting a grand jury decision not to indict former police officer Darren Wilson in the fatal shooting of teenager Michael Brown. About 100 people gather in front of Mead Chapel as Rubby Valentin Paulino '18 reads the names of victims of police brutality, including Brown, Tamir Rice and others.

A proposal to create an intercultural center on campus is approved. Dean of the College Shirley Collado announces that the center will be housed in Carr Hall along with the Center for the Comparative Study of Race and Ethnicity. The proposal for the intercultural center, which is slated to open in the fall of 2015, was introduced in the spring of 2014 in response to student concern that Middlebury lacked a space dedicated to providing for students of color, first-generation students, LGBTQ students and others who have historically been underrepresented or marginalized in higher education.

January

An exhibit featuring ten works by Andy Warhol opens in the Middlebury College Museum. The ten prints —recently gifted to the College by the Andy Warhol Foundation—trace the evolution of Warhol's career from his breakthrough 1962 Campbell's Soup Can series to the Cowboys and Indians portfolio he produced in 1986, shortly before his untimely death.

Award-winning New York Times columnist William Rhoden delivers the keynote address during Middlebury's 17th annual Martin Luther King Jr celebration. Rhoden's talk—"A Life and a Career, Indistinguishable from One Another"—highlights a fortnight of events that includes a JusTalks address ("What Does It Mean to Be White?: Developing White Racial Literacy"), film screenings (Freedom Summer), and a day of service.

The future of global health is the focus of the fourth annual Middlebury Center for Social Entrepreneurship winter symposium. Jennifer Staple-Clark, founder and CEO of Unite for Sight, and Mitch Besser, medical director and founder of mother2mothers, deliver the keynote addresses.

Project Resilience launches with a website and two-hour live storytelling event, in which students answer the question: "What's the hardest thing you've ever done?" The writing-to-heal project is the brainchild of Copper Couch '14.5 and Emma Erwin '15.5

The College opens the Virtue Field House, which features a six-lane 200-meter track, an indoor playing surface, offices, and a cardio workout area. In conjunction with the opening, Middlebury inducts its first class to the Athletics Hall of Fame.

Economics professor Robert Prasch dies suddenly, a loss that shocks and deeply saddens the community. Prasch arrived at Middlebury in 2000, teaching courses in American Economic History, History of Economic Thought, Monetary Theory and Policy, and Macroeconomic Theory. He had a large, out-going personality and was beloved by many.

On the final day of the month, the College celebrates the 129 seniors—the Feb Class of 2014.5—who are completing their undergraduate careers at Middlebury. Feb Celebration weekend is a grand affair, consisting of a Mead Chapel Ceremony and the annual ski down at the Snow Bowl.

February

Orientation for the incoming Feb class witnesses the "soft launch" of Middlebury's Green Dot program, a comprehensive approach to violence prevention on college campus.

Men's hockey coach Bill Beaney becomes just the 12th coach in NCAA history to record 600 career wins. Beaney, who will announce his retirement as the men's hockey coach at the end of the season, has coached the Panthers for 28 of his 35 years as a head coach.

A survey conducted by the Student Government Association reveals that 58 percent of students are satisfied or strongly satisfied with the social life on campus. Just three percent of respondents indicate that the social life "has gotten worse" during their time at Middlebury.

In a series of op-eds in the Middlebury Campus and on the blog Middbeat, students debate the value of competitive intercollegiate athletics at a residential liberal arts college. The instigating op-ed, "It's Actually Just a Game," prompts an impassioned but mostly civil exchange of discourse that takes place during the course of two or three weeks.

The 92 annual Winter Carnival unfolds with an ice show, fireworks, games, collegiate skiing events, and the Winter Ball, a weekend of activity made festive by more than two-feet of snow that has blanketed the campus.

The New England Review and the student-led Oratory Society join forces for an evening of readings in the Mahaney Center Concert Hall. The collaboration is part of a new program initiated by Middlebury's prestigious literary review called "NER Out Loud."

March

A late-night fire destroys a house on Weybridge Street that is rented by five students. Fortunately, none of the students are harmed.

Award-winning journalist and essayist Ta-Nehisi Coates speaks before a packed audience of students and community members in Mead Chapel. In his electrifying talk, Coates discusses the concept of racial identity and the issue of systemic prejudice and racism that has existed —and continues to exist—in the United States.

A hazing violation leads to the suspension of the social house Kappa Delta Rho. The house will remain unoccupied for the remainder of the semester.

Alpine skier Rob Cone '17 captures the men's giant slalom national title, the first men's individual skiing champion to represent Middlebury in more than 25 years.

Faculty and students debate whether laptops should be allowed in the classroom. No consensus was gleaned on the issue.

Middlebury extends offers of admission to 1,210 students in its regular decision round for the Class of 2019. That brings the total number of admitted students this year to 1,512, which includes 302 students who were admitted through the College's early decision rounds in December and early February. In all, this year's accepted students are selected from among 8,894 applicants, the second largest number in the College's history and an 8.5 percent increase over last year. Overall this year, Middlebury has admitted 17 percent of its applicants.

Alison Maxwell '15 claims the national championship in the women's mile during the final day of the 2015 NCAA Division III Indoor Championships. Maxwell becomes the first Panther individual champion since Khristoph Becker won the javelin outdoors in 2005, and the first female since Kristy Laramee stood atop the podium following the high jump event at the indoor national meet in 2000.

A cohort of about 20 undergraduates travel by bus to Montgomery, Alabama, over Spring Break and take part in activities commemorating the 50th anniversary of the civil rights march from Selma to Montgomery. Upon their return, the students are joined by their peers on campus, alumni, faculty, and staff for an event titled "The Civil Rights Struggle 50 Years Later: What Was, What Is, What Should Be."

April

The Middlebury community is stunned and devastated by the suicide of Nathan Alexander '17. At a memorial service held in Mead Chapel, Alexander is remembered as a gifted student and good friend.

More than 300 students in nearly every academic discipline display their academic work at the College's ninth annual Spring Student Symposium. The two-day event features scholastic work in the performing arts, visual arts, natural sciences, social sciences, and the humanities.

Donna Brazile—a best-selling author, political commentator, and political strategist—speaks in Mead Chapel, delivering an address where she exhorts all students to take part in the political process. Before the lecture, Brazile tweeted a selfie with a handful of students, which garnered hundreds of likes on Twitter.

The 2015 Gensler Family Symposium on Feminism in a Global Context focuses on "Punishing Bodies: Feminist Responses to the Carceral State."

The Davis United World College Scholars Program celebrates its 15th anniversary with panel discussions and a gala dinner at Middlebury. On hand are the program's founders, philanthropist Shelby Davis and Davis UWC Scholars Program Executive Director Phil Geier, as well as a number of UWC Scholars, past and present.

With the spring semester drawing to a close, the Middlebury faculty hold an additional meeting in April to talk about heightened student stress. While focusing mostly on short-term solutions that will have the greatest impact on the remaining few weeks of the academic year, the faculty pledge to have on-going discussions on a community culture of paramount importance.

May

The Old Stone Mill and Annex open the doors on their annual showcase, featuring more than 100 student projects that range from business start-ups to works of visual and creative art.

Nearly 30 students and student organizations are honored at the 2015 Dean of the College Student Leadership Awards.

The Class of 2015 celebrates the conclusion of their academic year at a commencement exercise marked by clear, sunny skies and a joyful environment. Julia Alvarez '71—writer, poet, alumna, and writer-in-residence—delivers the commencement address. Adam Milano '15 offers the student address. And honorary degrees are awarded to Alvarez; Nobel Prize-winner Martin Chalfie; acclaimed violinist Hilary Hahn; local educator Christina Johnston; and Harvard political scientist Eric Nelson. Hahn concludes the ceremony with a dazzling performance of the prelude from Bach's Partita No. 3 in E Major.

And the 2014-15 academic year concludes.

Sabhyta Sabharwal

Our Dear Sabhyta,

You continue to amaze us not only with your great accomplishments, but also through your positive attitude in life. You take everything in stride and with equanimity. May you continue to stay grounded and keep striving with patience, persistence and compassion. We are proud of not only what you have done, but who you are- a strong, yet sensitive young woman, who knows what she wants, and achieves it with maturity and humor.

We love you!
